

ABSTRACT

Animals such as mice used in laboratory tests are breed in such a way that the distribution of telomeres yields improved results. This can be accomplished by randomly assigning a breeding period to each animal, by otherwise influencing telomere distribution or by providing multiple populations of animals with different characteristics.

DJL PAS357271.1-*6/19/01 3:01 PM